The future is equal

FOOD FOR GAZA

Volunteers with Economic & Social Development Center of Palestine distribute vegetables to people affected by the conflict in Gaza. Oxfam and our partners have reached more than 1.1 million Palestinians with food, clean water, latrines, and sanitation system repairs, while advocating for the safe return of all hostages and unlawfully detained prisoners, a permanent ceasefire, and unhindered access to humanitarian assistance. Alef Multimedia/Oxfam

WE STILL BELIEVE IN A BETTER WORLD.
AND WE WILL CONTINUE TO FIGHT FOR IT.

The fragile ceasefire is a step forward, but millions of lives are still on the line as the humanitarian situation remains dire. Oxfam and our partners in Gaza are committed to ramping up our humanitarian mission, preventing the further spread of famine, and calling for accountability and a just peace that includes the voices of Palestinians and upholds the rights, dignity, and security of Palestinians and Israelis. At a time of major reductions in humanitarian and long-term development assistance budgets across the world, Oxfam remains committed to building a more equal future.

DEAR FRIENDS,

This has been a year of intense political, economic, and social disruption and shocks to the humanitarian sector. At a moment of massive upheaval and growing humanitarian disasters—from Gaza to the Democratic Republic of Congo—we are especially grateful for our community of supporters who keep us going.

When we sent out last year’s annual report, we had just learned the results of the presidential election. We knew the incoming administration was developing plans that could unravel decades of work reducing global poverty and advancing equal rights for all. Oxfam didn’t sit back and wait—we took immediate steps to prepare and respond.

Oxfam America does not take funding from the U.S. government precisely so that we can be an independent voice and steadfast partner to humanitarians on the ground, no matter what happens in Washington. Still, the pace and ferocity of the attacks—such as dismantling USAID within a matter of weeks, leaving millions without lifesaving humanitarian assistance—surpassed our expectations. Oxfam, along with so many in our sector, has had to adapt quickly to continue showing up effectively with and for people fighting for a better future in these challenging times.

Through it all, we have been undeterred from our mission. With your support, this year Oxfam was able to directly impact the lives of more than 14 million people around the world.

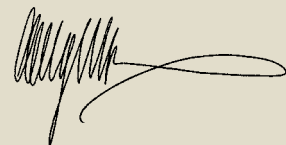

In this report, you will read about four Oxfam initiatives from the last year that are transforming lives:

- Disaster risk reduction efforts that have prepared 135 communities in six countries to anticipate and prepare for weather-related disasters.
- A program that is reimagining approaches to food security by uplifting women and minority farmers, influencing policy decisions, and training food producers to advocate for their interests.
- An innovation lab that takes a nontraditional approach to solving complex global issues and has helped bring justice to survivors of gender-based violence in Malawi and clean water to Venezuelan migrants in Colombia.
- Initiatives in Zambia, the Dominican Republic, Peru, and Vietnam that bring women into conversations around the distribution of revenues from industries that extract resources from their communities.

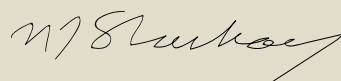

In such a chaotic time, we must all dig deep for courage and hope. People and communities around the world are not giving up, and neither is Oxfam. We believe as strongly as ever that collective action—between you, our supporters, and partner coalitions—will help us protect vital gains that we have made for justice and fighting poverty, and will put us back on the path to equality.

Thank you for your partnership over this past year.

With appreciation,

In the Democratic Republic of Congo: Oxfam helped reach over 670,000 people with food, clean water, sanitation, and cash assistance as well as hygiene kits for women and girls.

PROTECTING DEMOCRACY & CIVIC SPACE

Anti-rights agendas are chipping away at the hard-won gains achieved by worldwide movements for human rights. Our work aims to create the space in which everyone can safely speak up and hold the powerful accountable. In fiscal year 2025, Oxfam reached 321,000 people in 93 projects.

In Somaliland: In advance of the presidential elections, the Center for Democracy & Governance, in collaboration with Oxfam, held civic education and dialogue sessions for women and youth aimed at enhancing awareness of citizens' rights and responsibilities and promoting active participation in the democratic process.

RETHINKING FOOD ACCESS AND PRODUCTION

Achieving long-lasting food security means creating innovative partnerships, holding leaders accountable, and seizing the moment.

Hundreds of millions of people worldwide lack access to food though the world grows enough food to feed everyone. The causes of food insecurity are complex—from climate change and conflict to deeply unequal economic systems that disadvantage small farmers, particularly women. Yet we know that when communities around the world have the resources and training to support themselves and to advocate for fair policies and accountability, change is possible.

Oxfam is taking on these issues through an initiative called Together Against Poverty (TAP). This global project ensures that women farmers get the resources they need, that governments are held accountable, and that farmers are trained to become effective advocates for issues relating to land, food, and water.

The solutions to such far-reaching challenges are not one-size-fits-all. Oxfam and partners and communities are working together on a multifaceted approach engaging those in power, listening and responding to the needs of communities, and elevating those voices in national, regional, and global spaces. Together we have seen positive results in Tanzania, Ghana, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Burkina Faso, and the European Union.

In Nigeria's Nasarawa State, Oxfam brought together government officials, farmers, and other allies to help stakeholders affect state-level policy change. Program staff and farmers achieved a 75% increase in funds for the Agriculture Development Program, and the budget for the unit responsible for providing support to farmers went from zero in 2019 to $235,000 in 2020.

25+ MILLION people in Tanzania viewed the Female Food Hero competition.

Wudinesh Bekele, a woman farmer from Oromia, Ethiopia, is one of many people in the country who attended workshops to improve their financial literacy, public speaking, and leadership skills. This training has enabled them to engage directly with policymakers. “From being excluded from village meetings, we now speak with ministers,” Bekele said.

At the center of all this work are our partners—farmers, civil society organizations, and activists. They are leading the fight to make sure that farmers’ livelihoods are addressed in policies, that governments are held accountable, and that women’s voices are amplified. Together they are creating ways to help small-scale farmers prosper and adapt to a changing climate.

Some success stories from the TAP initiative:

GHANA: Working with small-scale farmers who were facing rising production costs, lower crop yield, and high taxes, Oxfam and our partners—the Peasant Farmers Association of Ghana, the Ghana Trade and Livelihood Coalition, SEND Ghana, and the Africa Centre for Energy Policy—pushed for fair tax policy. The Ministry of Agriculture responded to these demands by reinstating tax exemptions, including allocating at least 10% of the 2024 budget to the country’s Planting for Food and Jobs initiative, which small farmers rely on to make a living.

ETHIOPIA: Female food producers face challenges related to unequal access to resources, credit, and technology alongside repressive cultural norms and unpaid domestic care work burdens. Oxfam and local partner Sustainable Environment and Development Action influenced the Ministry of Agriculture to provide direct financial support for female farmers, and to review the budget to ensure funds meet the needs of women. As a result, more women have access to land, credit, and labor-saving technologies. The ministry also pledged to work with Oxfam and other stakeholders to weave women’s concerns into decision-making.

BURKINA FASO: In January 2023, a military coup in the country brought a new government, raising uncertainty about the future, as well an opportunity to amplify the interests of small-scale farmers by promoting local production. The new administration was more attuned to the rural sector and wanted to limit the country’s dependence on food imports. Oxfam and our partner Confédération Paysanne du Faso, a national farmers’ organization, worked with the government to launch an initiative focused on local production and consumption that prioritizes the demands of rural communities, preserves Indigenous farming practices, and creates access to equipment like tractors.

TAP represents the positive change that is possible through advocacy, local leadership, and persistence. By continuing to amplify grassroots voices and create new partnerships at all levels, we can pave the way for a more just and inclusive future in food security.

ADVANCING GENDER JUSTICE AND ACCOUNTABILITY IN NATURAL RESOURCE EXTRACTION

Women must be involved in deciding how to use revenues from mining to fight poverty.

When countries produce minerals or oil, what happens to the revenues, and how can communities ensure the resources generated are deployed to fight poverty?

Oxfam and our partners in Zambia, the Dominican Republic, Peru, and Vietnam have an answer: ask women.

Women are often the ones responsible for providing clean water for their families and tending to children and sick relatives, and as a result, they bear disproportionate costs of mining's negative impact on air and water quality.

For more than two decades, Oxfam has been working with civil society organizations in countries rich in natural resources to assert their rights to have a say over whether or how mineral and petroleum projects are carried out, and to have [information and] a voice in how revenues are deployed in national and local budgets.

Women have a basic right to be heard and to participate in decisions that affect them, but they are often excluded from these discussions. As one woman in Zambia said: "We want the revenue from mines to remain in our communities, so we can also benefit."

Oxfam supported networks of women's rights organizations and other groups concerned with government accountability and transparency of mining revenues. A key component involved training in “gender action learning” to raise awareness about the roles women can play in policy and budgeting meetings.

Over six years, these networks produced impressive achievements:

- An independent evaluation in 2022 showed that in Zambia there was an increase in the participation of women’s rights organizations in the discourse around mining policy, and a “notable increase in the awareness of women’s rights and participation in the communities.”
- The Zambia Alliance of Women formed fiscal transparency watchdog groups that advocated for a mining company to catch up on payments to communities, funding social services and women’s cooperatives.
- In the Dominican Republic, a law requiring mining companies to distribute 5% of their revenues in communities where they operate provided an opportunity for Oxfam’s partner CEFORMOMALI to secure $100,000 to support women-owned business cooperatives.
- In Peru, the National Organization of Indigenous Women and CooperAccion were involved in lobbying efforts that led to the government allocating $3 million of public funds for health services for women in Indigenous and other communities affected by heavy metals pollution.

- Oxfam has been collaborating with global organizations to create a Feminist Natural Resource Governance Agenda with recommendations about how women’s organizations can support efforts to improve fiscal transparency, and fight corruption. This agenda and other research findings encouraged the global Extractive Industry Transparency Initiative to require companies to include gender impact assessments and gender disaggregated data in community consultation reports.

“As the world scrambles for more minerals, it remains as urgent as ever to ensure that gender equity and respect for human rights, especially the rights of women and girls, underpin the management of natural resources,” said Maria Lya Ramos, associate director of Oxfam America’s Natural Resources Justice program.

AN INCUBATOR FOR EQUALITY

Oxfam’s Global Innovation Lab cooks up strategic solutions to complex challenges.

In Malawi, where 34% of women experience physical or sexual abuse, the legal system has been failing survivors. The court system is underfunded, and the high costs of pursuing justice are prohibitive, particularly for those who need to travel to get to a court. With these challenges in mind, Oxfam in Malawi, and our partners Alternatives for Victimized Women and Children CAVWOC, came together to find a survivor-centered solution tailored specifically to rural communities.

They worked with Malawi judiciary and police services to arrive at a concept that would bring justice to people—in the form of mobile legal clinics. These clinics provide legal aid, educate survivors on their rights, and significantly reduce barriers to justice for women in communities previously beyond the reach of traditional legal services. Since the pilot launch, mobile court sessions have directly reached over 2,000 community members.

“It is so transformative to see women, and especially girls, being confident to report gender-based violence,” said Twambilile Kayuni, field project officer for Oxfam in Malawi.

The mobile court initiative is just one of 14 pilot projects Oxfam has undertaken through aGILE—a Global Innovation Lab for Equality—since its launch in 2023. The innovation lab was established to cocreate solutions to complex problems of inequality as well as to scale those solutions for impact, from local to global.

“In a world and sector undergoing seismic changes, innovation is particularly imperative,” said Tawanda Mutasah, vice president of Oxfam America’s global partnership and impact division.

gender-based violence cases were resolved through mobile legal court sessions in Malawi.

238,000

people benefited from landmark legislation on care in the Philippines.

60KG+

We've applied this innovation mindset to tackling humanitarian crises as well. In Colombia, nearly 12 million people have no access to clean water. This includes Villa Pez, Aracua, a region along the border with Venezuela where migrants are living in informal settlements, and where 90% of residents lack clean, safe water. This situation was forcing women to undertake dangerous journeys to collect water, exposing them—and their children—to harassment and violence.

To reduce the risks associated with collecting water, Oxfam Colombia; local partner APOYAR, a humanitarian NGO; migrant women; water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH) experts; and local authorities collaboratively developed a rainwater capture and filtration system tailored to the rainy season of Villa Pez. The system is installed directly in homes and is supported by community training on maintenance and feedback loops to ensure continuous improvement. The prototype is now being tested in households.

Since its inception, the demand for the innovation lab's support has grown from incubating ideas within the Oxfam confederation and with our partners in the Global South to becoming a resource for innovation strategy development, organizational change, technical integration and training, and new business model experimentation.

"Within two years, aGILE has proven to be a valuable resource, supporting our staff and partners in shifting mindsets and strengthening their capabilities to design and implement innovative solutions that address growing inequality and poverty in their communities," said Laté Lawson-Lartego, chief innovation officer for aGILE.

Now, in line with Oxfam's commitment to shifting power and resources to communities and local organizations in the Global South so as not to unintentionally foster colonial dynamics in our ways of working, we are actively endeavoring to transfer the leadership and management of the lab to be closer to these communities. Oxfam America will continue to support the lab with both financial and technical resources.

"None of what we've achieved would have been possible without our staff and partner's unwavering collaboration from day one," said Lawson-Lartego.

TRANSFORMING THE WAY THE WORLD RESPONDS TO DISASTERS

This initiative tackles emergencies before they even happen.

In the remote western Nepal community Kutiyakabar, which lies at the confluence of two rivers, flooding is a significant risk. That's why the community set up a disaster management committee and put in place an early warning system to help the 240 villagers (and their livestock) evacuate when needed.

When the inevitable came to pass in 2024, the disaster committee sounded its siren, and the citizens knew what to do. "At the first siren, we became alert," said an elderly man living with a disability, a member of the lower-caste Dalit community in Kutiyakabar. "At the second one, we moved our belongings to higher locations; and at the third one, we evacuated to a safe place."

Kutiyakabar was one of the 40 communities in Nepal taking part in a disaster risk reduction initiative led by the National Environment and Equity Development Society (NEEDS). NEEDS helped people affected by the flood in 2024 with money partly from Emergency Response Funds (ERF) made available by Oxfam as well as resources locals raised themselves. The ERF is embedded in a larger program that helps communities like Kutiyakabar analyze their risks and take steps to save lives and property before a disaster hits.

Reducing risks and providing funding in advance of an emergency for local humanitarian groups are part of Oxfam's strategy to reimagine the way the world cope with humanitarian emergencies. Instead of waiting until disaster strikes, and waiting for governments and large international groups to gather the funds to respond, local humanitarian groups like NEEDS are already anticipating the next disaster, helping communities to reduce their exposure and respond more effectively.

Oxfam has been leading innovation in local humanitarian leadership since 2018. As communities face more and more dire threats from climate change, and less support from international actors, local approaches to reducing risk and responding to disasters are more essential than ever.

Since 2022, Oxfam has channeled $3.3 million to four local humanitarian groups in El Salvador and Guatemala working in 48 communities, many of them in the chronically dry Corredor Seco. We have also directed $4.5 million to support disaster risk reduction work with emergency response funds by eight partners working in 87 communities in the Philippines, Bangladesh, Nepal, and Indonesia. By early 2025, there were 135 participating communities in these six countries that now have locally led disaster risk reduction and early warning systems.

In Nepal, Anjali Bohora survived a flood in her community Khalla Maseti, and then she helped form a disaster management committee. Her role is to coordinate with the local government offices, prepare crisis management plans, and work with the government to carry out rescue operations in emergencies. Knowing her efforts will save lives inspires her. "It's important to help each other when times are difficult," she says. "We are all vulnerable when we're alone—but when we're together, no one can break our spirit."

FINANCIAL INFORMATION

(April 1, 2024, to March 31, 2025)

Total contributions for the 12 months that ended in March 2025 were $73.3 million. This is $7.9 million lower than the prior year due to $10.4 million less in restricted funded awards. In fiscal year ending in March 2024 (FY24), several large multiyear projects with donor restrictions were awarded. This funding went toward strengthening disaster risk reduction in Asia, supporting economic justice, and reforming and promoting work to fight economic, social, and gender inequalities in international financial institutions. Unrestricted contributions at $59.3 million were $3 million greater, or 5% higher than in FY24, mainly due to two unrestricted bequests Oxfam America received that totaled $3.5 million.

Program expenditures were $58.3 million for FY25, as compared with $62.2 million in FY24, reflecting $2.7 million less in grants to partners and $1.2 million less in other non-personnel cost expenditures versus the prior year. Similarly, support service expenditures were lower in FY25, compared with the prior year, reflecting approximately a $1 million lower level of investment in the fundraising budget. The reductions in non-personnel unrestricted spending, in both program services and support services, were made to protect reserves during this period of substantial economic uncertainty in the U.S., and especially in our sector.

The cost reductions coupled with the two large unrestricted bequest gifts received at the end of the fiscal year resulted in a much stronger financial position compared with the prior two years. Net assets without donor restrictions were $23 million, which is $2.7 million higher than in FY24.

OXFAM SUPPORTERS: MAKING A DIFFERENCE TODAY AND FOR THE FUTURE

We're grateful to you, our supporters, for giving so generously with annual contributions, gifts of stock or donor-advised funds, and monthly sustaining gifts—or by naming Oxfam in your estate plans. Your partnership inspires, energizes, and sustains us. Here are members of our community we'd like you to meet.

// Oxfam's practical approach to create a more just world is rooted in their commitment to basic human dignity. By delivering actionable solutions to issues, they empower communities to build a future free from poverty and injustice. Oxfam partners with local organizations by recognizing that communities understand their own strengths and challenges best. The impact of Oxfam's work is immeasurable as they empower communities through their programs. //

ANNIE KANE
SISTERS ON THE PLANET® AMBASSADOR

// As a Leadership Council member, I've seen firsthand their courage, rigor, and unwavering commitment to building a more just and equitable world. Oxfam doesn't just address symptoms—they challenge the systems that perpetuate inequality. They are unapologetically focused on impact, not image, and they work in deep partnership with local communities and organizations to lead lasting change. Their integrity, data-driven expertise, and bold willingness to speak truth to power reflect a philosophy I deeply admire and am proud to support. //

RUBY BIELIK
LEADERSHIP COUNCIL MEMBER

// Despite overall advances in global wealth, most of our fellow human beings remain trapped in deep poverty and marginalized politically and economically within their societies. Oxfam persistently shines a spotlight on the varied injustices of such systemic dysfunction, and along with local partners, champions inclusive, fair processes and reforms. They are my voice in support of the voices of the disenfranchised. Oxfam knows this work well from long experience in many settings, is passionate and resolute about it, and has the credibility and unique convening power to coordinate resources effectively for systemic change. //

PETER SANBORN
LEADERSHIP COUNCIL MEMBER

// I support Oxfam precisely because while you advocate for U.S. government funding to fight poverty, you do not accept it yourself so that you can be an independent voice. //

EMILIE RASMUSSEN
LEGACY CIRCLE MEMBER

// I have diligently supported Oxfam for the last two decades because I believe that the organization is uniquely positioned to fight inequality and injustice globally. Oxfam's critical humanitarian aid and wide-reaching policy work are of paramount importance in a political environment that seems intent on disenfranchising the world's neediest. //

LUCIAN SNOW
LEADERSHIP COUNCIL MEMBER

WE'D LOVE TO HEAR FROM YOU

MORE WAYS TO GIVE

The following non-cash options can help you make an even bigger impact on the global issues you care about most.

DONOR-ADVISED FUNDS (DAFs)

If you have a donor-advised fund, recommend a grant to Oxfam. To expand your impact, set up automatically recurring monthly, quarterly, or annual grants.

STOCKS, BONDS, OR MUTUAL FUNDS

Take advantage of long-term growth in the stock market by donating stock rather than selling it this year. You will avoid paying capital gains tax, and if you donate a long-term holding and itemize deductions, you may be eligible to deduct the full fair-market value of the asset you donated from your income taxes.

EMPLOYER-MATCHED GIVING

One of the easiest ways to increase your gift to Oxfam America is through your employer's matching gift program. Thousands of companies, including corporations, foundations, not-for-profit organizations, and associations, match their employees' charitable contributions—for as much as double the amount of your initial gift. Your gift along with your employer-matched gift can double our ability to offer lifesaving support to people in crisis right now, and to tackle the root causes of poverty for the long term.

Here's how to participate: Obtain a matching gift form from your human resources office and review the program guidelines to ensure that Oxfam America is eligible to receive matching gifts. Conditions and criteria for gift matching vary by employer. Complete the donor section of the form and submit it, along with your check or credit card authorization, to Oxfam America.

QUALIFIED CHARITABLE DISTRIBUTION FROM AN IRA

If you would like to make an impact now and are 70½ years or older, you can give any amount up to $108,000 per year for an individual or $216,000 for a married couple from your IRA directly to a qualified charity such as Oxfam without having to pay income taxes on the money.

CHARITABLE GIFT ANNUITY (CGA)

You can support Oxfam and receive dependable income in your retirement years through a CGA. This life-income gift provides a favorable rate of return based on your age. Contact us for a personal calculation.

CRYPTOCURRENCY

Oxfam America accepts Bitcoin (BTC), Ethereum (ETH), and other cryptocurrencies. These donations are automatically converted into U.S. Dollars for immediate use, providing lifesaving support to communities around the world. The IRS classifies cryptocurrency as property, meaning it is not subject to capital gains tax and is tax deductible. Donating crypto directly to a 501(c)(3) nonprofit can result in greater tax benefits for supporters compared with converting it to cash prior to donating. Tax receipts are sent automatically when supporters include an email address with their donation.

FUTURE GIFTS

Help fight inequality to end poverty and injustice for decades to come through a gift to Oxfam America in your will, living trust, retirement plan, life insurance, or other means such as real estate. Here is suggested bequest language:

"I give and bequeath to Oxfam America, Inc., Tax ID # 23-7069110, [insert written amount, percentage of estate, or description of property] for its general charitable purposes."

OXFAM FIGHTS INEQUALITY TO END POVERTY AND INJUSTICE

STRENGTHENING COMMUNITY RESILIENCE

Kaltum Ahmed Mohamad, 40, lives in Sincaro, Somalia, where she sells tea in the village. A former pastoralist, she and her family lost all their camels, sheep, and goats to ongoing drought.

"We have had a severe drought for a long time," she says. "You only get water from time to time. ... You can't imagine how hard it is to get water here. This drought had a big impact on our lives."

Oxfam has been rehabilitating the town's well, and we built an elevated water storage tank, troughs for watering livestock, and an irrigation system. The well is the only source of water for miles around, and thousands of animals come to it every day from three different regions.

"Oxfam has done many things in this village," Mohamad says. "They are doing a good job. Our well is being repaired. ... This will change the lives of so many people."

Shaffi Abdi/Oxfam

OXFAM

Oxfam is a global organization that fights inequality to end poverty and injustice. We offer lifesaving support in times of crisis and advocate for economic justice, gender equality, and climate action. We demand equal rights and equal treatment so that everyone can thrive, not just survive. The future is equal. Join us at oxfamamerica.org.
